have the pleasure of a conversation with you on the subject of the following question: — What would be the effect of a law which forbids any person to sell or give away any article which has been obtained by force, fraud, or duress? — I hope to have the pleasure of answering your question before I leave this city.

A Modest Plead.

Eport speaks me a Prisoner for my last Pamphlet; and if I knew who raised it, or would have it so, I would (in earnest) thank them for it.

First, As the greatest honour they can do me, to bring my Leviathan upon the Stage; and make me suffer in a Como, which every honest man prefers before his Being.

Next, I should thank them for afflicting toward the Discovery of the Kings Enemies, which Beyond doubt those people are, that will torment themselves for a Reflection that concerns no other: —— I say again, there is an appearance of a Confederacy; but I fix nothing upon Persons: whoever says, There be traitors, is in the right, if he be one of the Conspirators; otherwise not. They know their own Affections best, and I my own thinking: which yet I take to be so plainly exprested, as that no Englishman can make a Question of it.

This General Rumour has made me call my Papers and my Thought to life; and neither in the One, nor in the Other, do I find anything (according to my judgement of my Due

The Author of the following Article was born in New-Hampshire, and died at Boston, in New-England, in the Year 1771. He was a Gentleman of Education and Genius, and had written several Poems, and also Lectures, both Moral and Religious. He was found among the Confidants and Servants of the Revolution, above a Million of Dollars were placed in His safe kept. Towards the close of his life he left his native Country, and went to France, where he died and埋葬于 the Tomb of his Countrymen, leaving his family destitute. 100

I found in the same Collection a Letter from the Author of the most distinctly, That General Washington performed a service for General Lee, "Conveying him over the Hudson River, that General Lee might be Deceived, by General Washington, in his Plan to trap General Lee, and his Army, into the Hudson River Scheme." (See the next Article.) 100 100 100

Thus far with Reference to this Matter, which is yet more than has been necessary. Has not the Authorship of him that wrote the Canto drawn from me? Nor do I find a Syllable that can by any Violence of Community or conjecture, touch the Canto. Nay to prevent all colour for such a mistake, I have OBLIGATION, we may say, minus a Tittle.

Let it be now considered, what this same Cause may, rationally effect upon the People:

The Authority of Prince & Divine, and Disloyalty their Commission makes their Persons sacred, a double Crime. If They transgresse, it is against God, (which is Officers and Deputies that are) in regard of His, & We transgresse; it is both against God and Themselves — a double Disobedience. Ibid.

This is indeed a fault of his Majesties Bloud, Loyalty to the Person of his Prince in danger, and an indispensable does not interpose to save him; though he be done to Die himself, even by the hand of his Wives

Nor is it enough for Subjects to bear a General Loyalty upon their Actions, and to do what they can, but it also extends to the Depth of their Lips, Tongue, Conscience, the Tyrants will at their Pleasure, And the Party Boylings of these Thoughts may be seen in the beginning of the next page.

We that are thus interred in the Graves, and Tombes of Duty, when we find the world of Kings, cannot make out for us, that we did the Conspiracy, and achieve double duty; But, as we may not be ignorant of the Cause and End, then to endeavour to set all clear? Which I have laboured; first by affixing our misfortunes to their true Causes; and then, by counterfeiting a Fair, and humble Advice, concerning matter of Fact to his Sacred Majesty.

Where lies the Crime of This I am to speak; especially proceeding with all that's possible of Honour and Humility, toward the Person, Office, Dignity, and the unquestioned wisdom of my Sovereign. Is it not lawful for a Private Subject to offer his Prince an Information? Nay, is he not obliged under the pain of Perjury and Treason, (if under Oath, as I am) to the Discovery of any thing he knows or suspects, that may be dangerous to his Majesty? If it be Criminal to withhold such, without the knowledge of which a Prince cannot be safe, then I'm in a mistake; otherwise no. For there I rest without preferring; my Duty being only to discover, without particularizing to advise or direct.

Within these Limits I contain my self; and by this rule of Regulation, I have not only governed my Life, my Tongue, my Pen; but even my Thoughts.

And yet some take Exception at this following passage. Let us examine it.

There are another sort also of cold Comforters, false therallie, 'tis no time yet: To be, to a company of Friends, of Wits, who can say no longer than they can Pity, with little compunction.

— Come back Owles, is not to see the Sun at led)

A Modest Plea.

(b) to his Country, Fecy, neyther Hundred Thousand Pounds downe, and when the Nation shall demand it in what ever Taxes their Blood; than Proportioned, that foretold shall be done for us. That is, the Honour shall be paid to soe muche unding of the Nation, and (c) Argumēt for another. (See p. 92.)

To 'Tis a strange thing, there should be so much Venome in this Countrey, or in the Heire of it, and yet upon the search of every Particular, and every Corner of my Soule, I should be fitt to say to great a Losse, where to find it. Nay more then that; the further and the longer I enquire into my self, the stronger is the Testimony my Conscience bears of my Integrity. But to approve my Heart in this particular as well to Men, as (I beseech Heaven) I can, and do to God, we'll look into the Cōference of This Section. The professed drift of it is this.

Having in the Fore-going Section, soberly proposed, by Information, to give his Majestie a clear and naked yvw of Men, and Affairs, for prevention of such mistakes as probably might arise from false representations, I passe toward to a Contion, if we mighte please him M-A-ESTY: wherē the first page, and half, is a discourse upon the Authority of Kings, and the Duty of Subjects, stating the Power at large as Majestie it selfe can wish, and tying up the Subjects by the most strict, and conscientious bands of Duty; applying all at last to the very Person of our King, and to his Parliament.

Toward the bottom of the Page mentioned, made made of the King's Friends and Friends and disolute persons; which I advise may not be understood as any ill opinion from the King upon his Party, but as a plain and pointed animosity against the vice of blasphemy and dissoluteness. 'Tis we know very well what are intended to blast the Royal Party with that Chatter; and that his Majesty can only by report, take notice of those libels, which no man is so shameless as to practice in his presence.

I come now so that passage, which were I given to Bapt, should be my Glory, but as 'tis tell'd upon the tongue of fame, 'tis that which I would rather be a Bapt, than be the Author of. In the language of mislike it ounds thus much That I should undertake to question the King's Bonnets, and tax the Sacred Ministry, and giving away forty, — thousand pounds in a moring while his friends Harve.

"With respect to the first Promoter of this before you the ground of this reprobation, and thus justify my silence in Paraparaumu."

2 the hungry Royalists mouths with telling us 3 it is not time yet. Tis time enough for them to 4 beg, though not for us, even before the King 5 comes to be served, which is a little preposterous.
6 Again, I say they say, I do not say Obtain 7 your sum, —— —— that is, the Bounties, which 8 if the King should grant, 'tis (as I say a little 9 higher) but the unquestionable Pretrogative of his Royal goodness from all other good intentions than such

- Nayver againd it may fall out, so, that the rothing they beg, may prove worth five times more then they pretend it is; than is the King's gift but a fist part of what they get, to be in v[er]y Ma-

But to finish. In this connexion of discourses,¹⁰ the question is not, what the King gives, nor what they give, nor is his Majesty accountable,⁰¹ for their importunities: But do they deal fairly,⁰² with us or no? That's the point. Is it not time,⁰³ for us, as well as for them? Not that we murmur,⁰⁴ but we protest. When we want bread, we will starve honourably, because the Publick weal will have it so; yet still we shall subject our selves to privation, nor so deplorably.

At least, 'tis said, we shall have something too; but have a care of that; for when the Nation is drawn low, a heavy tax upon the people would do the King more hurt, than such relief is worth. Wherefore though our friends' fears are great, yet still one Loyalty nigher to surmount our wants; Let us not rob the King of his people's affections, to fill our own bellies; and

Rather, (say I) let me resolve to suffer any thing, than Principle, his Majesty, then cause him to suffer in the least for me. Page 29.

This fore-going Caution (with misgivings) MAJESTY, or in effect our selves) is follow'd with an enquiry into the designs, and workings of the Kings Enemies, whether in the way of restitution, or else of domination, is offered to their judgement of the learned, & judicious among them.

that most important point, (no lesse then Heaven or Hell) The Confessio[n] of the Confessio[n], will be vindicato[n]e for the Errors of a Confessio[n].

The next and last Chapter treateth how necessary it is for a Prince, to judge the ~~grievances~~^{grievance} of the people, and of the Arts the Passion nesto put his Majestie, and his Party upon successfull to do he ministr[ies]; Concluding with a saying of Barclay in his Supp[ort]o[n]. [Vnde[m] d[omi]n[u]s dominus sit et est, & licet ad eum captiuu[m] nos tristis publice rogauim[us].]

I was my self Sold by Thomas Edmund of Lym Regis in Dorset, a Renegado from our own Party, and now living. One of the Comme-ters for my Head (for virtually he was so) Doctor Mall, that sentenced me to Death without a hearing, is now Chanceller to the Bishop of Norwich. After my condemnation, I threw a Paper among them, and told them, who was my defensor; since they would not hear it, they might search. One of the Committee took the Paper, and against the sense of the Commetaries Sir Edward Baynham knows whether this be so or no.

Now to my Post-script, what can be more conducting to the King's safety, than the discovery of those, of whom His Majestie stands most in danger? That is, first, such as have been at least of his Majesties Councils and Designs. Secondly, such as have received monies, possibly for the Kings relief, and never accounted for

A Modest Plea.

These people are upon a double account exceeding dangerous. First, they are call'd out of Princely, and in hourly fear to be Devoid, which makes them desperate. Next they have farther opportunities of doing mischief. They appear among us friends, and act against us as enemies. It is in short but true, the enemy is in our Quarters, and has got the world

Let me look back now, or let any man now answer me; where is that syllable to which an honest man may not set his Name? Many there are, to which a wise man would not, but what of skill may be born with, where there's good meaning.

If reverence to the King's Authority, humble affection to his Person: If absolute submission to all his Actions, be an offence, then am I guilty. My fault is only the putting thole Points by, which otherwise would wound the King, (because, perhaps they prick some of his Enemies); where is the man that pretises Loyalty, that tieks the knot of Duty harder then I do? And to conclude, where have I preach'd order then I preach?

Yet truly, were the subject in it self not altogether humble, the occasion, and my first fault might excuse me. I did not lead the Dance. J. H. would needs be giving the world a sign of hisunning, and harsh objections, which we must either overrule or suffer by. Now therefore, Sir, will he be both reveng'd. ROUND-HEADS, says the Author of the Cordial.

This

This is a charge upon the Cavalier, for to be sure, the other Party will not complain. Since marred it is, that indeed some persons are exercised beyond common expectation, what better office could I do either to his Majesty or his People than to lay a claim upon the people now, to enquire too boldy into the actions of their Sovereign? Had I done less the slur had stuck upon us had I. I. done nothing, I had been silent. Again [whereas some except a certain Major of Loyalists and their agents have] Not wee, say I, could I lay less? and at this rate he founders away his birth and Country, in vindication of the King, as if we did for his Majesty. When to deal freely, he very well in so much, and if I had a mind to blast a cause, I would engage that Gentleman to be for it.

Near to this provocation, I might plead my Puritan Friends, had I not still a stronger Plea Injustice.

But to remove the Faultiness of my Backsider. Let us suppose's Fault: what is the Quality of it; and who the Offender? It is an Error, either of Innuendit or of Sancyness: (for that's the work they lay of it) and the Offender is a Person that has been twenty years a faithful Servant to the Crown. Greater Crimes than this have been perform'd, within the Memory of man; yes and lesser Offenders too, and those that are most advanc'd by That Party, are now the shambell upon mee.

Now to the point of Prudence. I shall truly grant, that to exasperate so Keen, so Crafty, and Deadly

Notes upon Mr. James Howell, Esq.

Dear Sirs & Friends, I HAD written these notes before, and intend to have made them more ready than at present, but I have had so long before me, returning back again [sic] to old friends, plain, Legal, and useful Truths, then that difficulty should suffice for overlooking them. I shall most readily choose our selfs notes than References, which I do now mix talk of.

Notes upon Mr. James Howell, Esq.

I FEEble wrote the GAVEAT to the CAVALIERS, had been of the Gentleman's Council, that pen'd the CORDIAL; he should never have known'd the Author, nor durst say that, have defend'd the matter of it. In the same West door, why was it distinctly in the entry that justified? Mr. Howell, &c.

The L. PROJECTOR, writes he would have made him fit King or Queen of Europe; OLIVER CROMWELL no CHIEF OF THE S. M. T. & Co. and compleat him in those worthiest parts indeed, and make him but Montezuma (says he) greatest Monarch of America and in that mighty Foundation of infinite power, he introduc'd the second race of Kings, who were not less great, his actions be used to say, than he followed not the motion of his heart, so much as the Inspiration of his soul, and the designs of Providence. This may be apply'd to our High-souled and virtuous, of your great influence and considerable success,

I rest in the lowest posture of obedience

AT THE END OF THE HIGHEST OPINION,

One passage more I remember, that is of very pretty inscription. Under the name of J. O. LYANDER is couch'd the name of the Duke, whom you must imagine to be a man of Parts, and Travelled. This Lyander gives his opinion, for a simple Person against all other forms of Government.

But when he say, that it is now time to be satisfied, that, though the Author of this book, written in the year 1645, did publish it, yet there is no use of it, A. W. B. will tell us it is Scarcely Read.

To give J. H. his due, the whom Oliver could not have given his Name-fair better counsell, The Book indeed does mighty cry up the Royal Prince, and is a little sharp upon the Scots, and the thing commonly call'd the Long-Bailllement, which yet at that time done, does impugn the Author of it, either a book-Seller or a poor Subject for writing their dividivisions, it was our interest, still to uphold the weaker side, and hinder the way from so fine. Neither can any thing be more uncharfor-mable than to exalt the rights of Sovereignty, when a Traitor wields the Sceptre. It does but serve to fix the Crown upon the tyrannical Head, to magnifie the Power of Kings, when the Wise manages the Office.

I was an unlucky witness, in Mr. Howell's to Christen this vindication of his friend. — SOBER INSPECTIONS: if he had call'd it any by thing else, (except S.P.Q.V.) the Pamphlet might have liv'd and dyed free from that envy which commonly attends great Wits and Undertakings. Not one of forty (I dare almost swear) but would have been content with the bare Title page, and never have turn'd the leaf; — but first to set the poor Cavaliers with a Coriolan of like animus & Puffe, then all Fub, and then to mend the matter by a sad tale in favour of it, that wears a Title to give a Horse a Vomit.
This is not kindly done.

H. I.

But that the world may not mistake, I Have for JAMES HOWEL, — the said JAMES HOWELL Esq; (in his Journey of VENICE, declared in the SUPREME AUTHORITY of the Nation, the PARLIAMENT of England, in 1651.) it clearly for a COMMON WEALTH: For (says he) were it within the reach of human discretion to prescribe rules for fixing Society, and government of people under the same Species of government; as long as the world lasteth; the

REPUBLIC OF VENICE AND THE UNITED STATES [An Address for Direction and Instruction.]

- And in the center of the Republic, he treats the mighty monarchs of Armenia and Russia.
MR. NOBLE SENATORS, he begins, and with a dignity befitting both the Prodigy and the Preset, Thou brazened dog, — Therefore most basely under Jacob, the Author himself is a piece of humanity in whose heart humanity is but a faint spark that Noble Assembly, by 30th instant, has been put out.

— and it is on this daily Occasion, when mighty but easily strong, brazened HOWELL,

Now on the other side, J. H. in his Epistle to the PROTECTOUR tells this noble NO-BLE ASSEMBLY a MONSTER and his HIGHNESS, HERCULES, in Reading of it.
Yes, such a Monster, and such Herculean force and devotion all the Tyrants have.

Who this J. H. was, or Tame JAMES HOWELL belonged not to our Inquiry; the Author of the Insulting Epistles indeed very closely; Towne are now, we know not; and so far I, there may be more James Howell now.
But if the Person now in question should prove to be a kin to the Other, we may be very well excused if we suspect him Criminal, and if we rather close our own Eyes, in our own Concern than another's.

In this contest between One Tyrant and many; if the Noble Assembly had but half the Army,

Now, then Oliver had been the ~~King~~, & his Fortune would have it otherwise, and so shewing Let fall a speech the NOBLE ASSEMBLY, And now a half-penny broadsheet may whisper the Dogs kill'd the Sow, or the Sow the Dogs good noisy and to move at ood enoughe A. Some Subjects are like Common Beggars; that may safely swoll that they love Twenty several Wenchies, best, in Four and twenty hours, and to such humour, no Government comes amiss; that carries either Health or Mischief along with it. He that expects the fixing of that sort of people, might better wait, till a River should either stop its course, or run to self weary.

Lobby, or Lobbying, in some old Books (about A.D. 1700) is the opinion of some old writers

Others there are who I verily believe did calculate Kingfisher's Bubble for a Parliament, & yet such we must not blame for calling it so. Yet for the Gentlemen that never were, nor will, nor ever can be of That Judgement, we should deliver up all to those who Advertise out of that number, & on employ'd much good from a Physician that could not help himself, say, What add

But too much time is spent in Preamble, for which, the Gentleman whom it concerns may thank himself: I knew at first who wrote the Corrid; but truly I had no Ambition to measure my self with Mr. Howell; and my Remarks upon the Misde, did not so much as glance upon upon the Master. No sooner were the Impressions in publick, but my Stationer comes to me by Mr. Howell's Order, with a Letter of Safety, I being informed a Person that from Credit with him much His Majesty was plus abundant with general Additions too, in favour of the person that composed it. Some parts of this is the second Impression of my Govern; I hardly mentioned, and so let it be no more in this edition.

Upon Thursday or Friday last, out comes another miserable Paper done by the same hand, and in justification of the former; which I will needs take notice of, for divers Reasons, whereof, I swear, the Author and the Thing it self are none.

The Copy was pressed upon my Stationer, (a very honest and a Loyal person) as yet unfinished: who gave me notice of the publication, but without any thought of undertaking it. With much ado, I prevailed with him to comply with the good Gentleman, and out comes Gravity in self under the Form of THREE SOBER INSPECTIONS, &c. The very Title speaks the Author no Physician; and he that stands condemned to read the Text, may swear he is no Conjuror. He writes himself Histriographer Royal, and tells his Tale to show his Office, piety, and a chivalry Tale it is, though it were nameless.
A Toledo Captain met Philip the Second a hunting; and taking him for a Private person, told him he might go to Court, to demand a Reward for his service. The King asked him if he had not received his Pay? He said, "No, but increasing a strong Hazard, to the Kings, for as Ayde de L'Isle, supposingly drav'd by Well-sayre's advice, did in 1441, his Master will laye you under, why not in 1453, my Master's selfe, or his Captaine, Hereford, or any other of his Knights, and their men bring the Captaine into the Kings presence, and present him admiration. The Captain appears, and will saye, Sir, I take the King's Will, and I am sent yesterday the King shew'd me to you, Sir, if I can / / (In our Authors own words) The Captain being nothing at all daunted, said; Truly Sir, My Master is ready at the Court-gate, if there be occasion. The King saye This, Orders the Captain good rewards yesterday, and 2000. Ryals Annually.

The Condition of the English Cavalliers is much more considerable (sayes our Historian); for the Spanish Captains had all their Armies paid them, which our Cavalliers have not. [page 41] And so the King did not see fit to do what he intended, and so the Captain was not paid his due.

Most Logical and profound! for as Tressenden-Shope was the cause of Godwin Smits, even so Good people Love one another.

But can the great Defender of our Cause, spy out no other Difference betwixt the Captains Case and Ours, than matter of Pay? That was of Mischief and Reverence, though the King lik'd it never so well, ought to have been Re-pay'd and Punisht. Suppose the bluntness of the man hit the Kings Honour, Yet was it not the less below his Dignity, even so suffer to exemplify a Boldness, but much more, to reward it; therein preferring his Praise to his Honour: Not but that Ministers are men as well as Subjects, and may be allowed their Appetites, and Liabites; yet beyond question, This was an Oversight in Policy to lay himself so open; length of his Foot, and that they found there were more wyes than good to Profit, and Preference; it would have been no wonder to have been That Prince [serv'd] and attended by Tumblers and Buffons, in stead of Satefours.

The Gentleman hath many other pretty fragments of Story, which being exceedingly beside his Purpose, I reckon not much to min; wherefore let them rest: But in good manners something we will afford him in Recompence, which his INGREDIENTS, and his COMPOSITION put me in mind of.

The late Lord Goring after a dear and ill-dressed Dinner at Bruxells, sends for mine Hdg, and treats him with this Complement: Friend (sayes he) I do take Thee for one of the best Cooks in Christendom, 'tis but too faulst; The One is; Thou hast the wryest Ingredients in Nature; The Other is; Thou putt'st them the worst together. This is the Fortune of some Writers too as well as Cooks.

Touching our Authors Calculation of Twenty Canaliers preserv'd for One Rambois; I have already spoken what I thought fit and modest in my Caveat; but since it is Mr. Howell's pleasure to re-enforce it, rather then press the point too far, wee'll grant it: but then, Twenty of Mr. Howell's Canaliers (reckoning himself for One) will not make half so many Qui Miserabilis ad vestibus tractat 28130

In his last page he tells us, that divers great Kings have bin induced to raise, and reward those that were under their very Seats, FOR A TIME.]

And why FOR A TIME? (if a body may ask). But this shall be discussed at Length hereafter. In short, he tells us what he told us before, and winds up, Thus.

J. H.

To conclude, he who with a sober and well-basd'd judgement will examine that Cordial will find there then is never a Line, Word, or Syllable therein but creates some fitnesse of a perfect Cavalier, as above twenty other several pieces of the same Author publish'd upon Emergent occasions do breathe; besides, there is no sweetfall drug, or the least Corrosive drawn in it; but all gentle Qualties, therefore he wonders how it should stirr up such Malignant humours in any, unless it were in them who having something lying upon the stomach made wrong use of that Cordial recall it up.

We will allow the Gentleman to be a perfect Cavalier, a perfect Republican, (if he pleases) a perfect Prudtorian, a perfect Any-thing; rather than disagree about his Perfection: but I would he had not appealed to his Pieces. And truly if he had spared the Malignant humors, and the Quaristic Stomach he talks of, it would have been never the worse, for the Author of the Cordial. But now he finds himself so much deceiv'd in his Operations, I hope he'll amend.
He sees his Cordials prove Vomits, and let me forget my own Name, as he has done his, if what Mr. Howell gives to move Choler, does not provoke excessive Pleasure.
